OPPORTUNITY

Opportunity is available to everybody, but the key is how we embrace and take action when it is presented to us. Opportunities are always there to be taken, and when an opportunity is taken, as long as you work within the laws, you will achieve.

We are never unsuccessful because opportunities are taken away from us or used by others. You may be disappointed not to be in a certain line of work, but there are other options open to you. When an opportunity comes, you need to take it, as long as it fits your purpose and there is an alignment with your thoughts, feelings and actions. But you cannot do everything, you must focus.

Opportunity moves in different ways at different times. There is an infinite amount of opportunity for humans who go with the tide instead of trying to swim against it.

Hard work is important but sometimes you also need diligence and wisdom. Think about a fly on a windowsill trying to get outside. Without wisdom, despite all its trying, it will die on the windowsill. But if it looks, it will see the door and escape. If one opportunity is against you, look around and go with another. The point is about having the wisdom to realise when another approach is needed. It is not about giving up or changing your goal, but simply looking for another way to achieve it.

The law of success is the same law for everybody. We tend to think that certain workers will remain where they are if they continue to do the same job. But they are not thinking. The problem is everything is created through a thought process and they believe they cannot do anything else. That worker is held down only by ignorance and mental sluggishness, if they think an individual can just follow the tide of opportunity to riches or success.

It has been said that a palace the size of the Taj Mahal could be built for every family in India, the land is there, the materials are there. Under intensive cultivation, this could be achieved because there is unlimited supply from nature. The visible supply is practically inexhaustible, while the invisible supply, through intangibles, really is inexhaustible.

So, when you set your goal, you fall in love with that idea and you emotionalise it. By emotionalising that idea, your body takes action. The same applies to simple bad habits.

The whole universe is made of this infinite intangible. Space has a lot more to offer and everything is hugely available, but with our senses, we only see a limited amount of resources. Our senses are not allowing us to see these things. People are not successful because nature makes them fail; nature is an inexhaustible store house and we just need to take it in the right way.

When the supply of building materials is exhausted, more will be produced. When the soil is exhausted, oil will keep coming, food will keep coming. If human beings are still in such a stage of social development as to need that golden syrup, it will be produced, we just need to take action.

The amount of money that we earn depends not just on who we are, but on the demand for what we do and our ability to do it individually and collectively, and the difficulty in replacing our piece of core competence. If you are doing something that people want, and you are doing it to the best of your ability and every day you perfect yourself, then the flow will happen. And when the flow comes, you will keep providing your service, and provide good things to the world.

People are often about what is in it for them. That is wrong. Nothing is just for yourself because you are only here for a temporary time. Rather than asking what your country can give to you, you should ask what is it that you can give to your country. Be a giver.

It is natural for all of us to want more, not greediness. Wanting more is the expansion of your spirit. Greed is snatching things from people. Growth is accessing and receiving from nature: you willingly give, and you graciously receive. The opposite is also true; when you do not give, nothing comes. If you are just static and you are not giving, you are not thinking, and you are not taking action; nothing will come.

Nature is formed for the advancement of life. Its objective is the increase of life because the spirit is always looking for more expression. Everything that can possibly administer in our life can be provided if we know how to access it – not to take it, to access it; we just have to figure out how.

Opportunity cannot be monopolised because it is everywhere, but still sometimes the opportunities are not there for us. We blame circumstances, conditions, even other people. But what we are not grasping is that everything is internal and is happening within us. If we really want something, we do not need to go and ask, we just need to work with our conscious mind, our subconscious mind, and then internalise the idea, emotionalise the idea, and the body moves.

You need to ask why the majority of the world's humans have their future in their own hands but do nothing. It is because they are not thinking like that and not understanding. Once they understand these concepts and operate within the laws, they will attract the right things. The law of attraction brings success through doing certain things in a certain way.

Those who do things in a certain way, whether on purpose or accidentally, succeed and have a fantastic life, enjoying every moment. Those who do not do things in this certain way, no matter how hard they work, or how able they are, remain unhappy and unsuccessful, poor and frustrated.

It is natural law that life causes bring life effects, so any human that learns to do things in this certain way will see their life become a joy. But it is not easy to implement.

Getting successful, getting happiness, getting richer and getting what you want to achieve is not natural. If it were, all the people in certain areas would become wealthy or successful while those of other towns would be poor. When two people are in the same area and the same business, one phenomenally successful while the other remains incredibly poor and miserable, this shows that getting successful is not primarily a matter of environment.

Think of two siblings, where one has a happy married life and the other does not. When two people are in the same business, in the same neighbourhood, and one gets successful while the other fails, it shows how opulence and happiness are the result of doing things in a certain way.

Some environments may be more favourable than others. You are a product of your DNA and a product of your environment, which you cannot control. Location does count for something. One would not go to the heart of the Sahara and expect to do so well. That is where your wisdom and ability to make judgements comes in, which comes with your higher intellectual faculties.

Opportunity is something presented to you because you have invited it; because on your own, in secret, you have been thinking the right thoughts. When it comes, obviously depending on your level of emotional involvement, that opportunity should be taken fully as long as you do certain things in a certain way.
